PROCIB-D-15
DRAFT-SUPPLEMENT
22 September 1959

(Insert new numbered paragraph between paragraphs 1 and 2)

During a period of limited emergency, when hostilities appear imminent, community activity to assure procurement of foreign publications would include confirmation of availability of alternate Relocation Sites; reviewing and up-dating rosters of procurement personnel, with current addresses, language ability, clerical skills, suitability for overseas duty, placing "insurance" subscriptions through peripheral posts for carefully selected newspapers and journals; establishing order of succession for the Chairman and members of PROCIB; and designating a director of the Foreign Documents Center.

(A new paragraph - paragraph 9)

The center of gravity of PROCIB and the location of the Foreign Publications Center would probably be at or close to the Relocation Sites of the member agencies. Several of the alternative sites previously selected (paragraph six, above) should be known to key personnel designated to work at or with the Foreign Publications Center. If the first one or more choices should be unavailable or unsuitable during an emergency, notification to surviving personnel would be limited to an indication of the point to which they should report. In the absence of this notification such people would use their own discretion in reporting to the most favorable alternative site known to be usable.
